

Adding on the CV and email attached, here are a few points I'm super unsure of.

===== For CV =====

1. I might have confused project with Research... Should I put the Integrated Project in Columbia Actuarial as "project" or "Research", considering I have only 2 real research experience?
2. Should I also put my internship experience on it ? - all are quant researchers and I thought they were "irrelevant" to phd...
3. Should I remove the "About Me" and "Scholarship" section? (thought as "irrelevant" either)

(I attached another version of my CV, which differs from the previous on in terms of these uncertain points. except still without internship section)

===== For Cold Mail =====

Originally, I wrote V1 myself, yet had another peer help me revise it before showing it to you (V2). Yet honestly, I thought it's a bit too bragging...

Especially for the 2nd point - "how to prove it's not a problem that I don't have a M.S. degree" - I am worried about the phrasing (like "earn" and "ace", would it be too aggressive?) But he told me this can exactly show my strength.... Yet I wanna keep it in a more humble way, idk which is more appropriate :pray:
